POSITIONING STATEMENT & MARKETING OBJECTIVE

POSITIONING STATEMENT

Healing Justice Santa Barbara serves as the only nonprofit organization that aims to create a safe, equitable, and joyful space for Black folx living in Santa Barbara. HJSB focuses on increasing the visibility of the Black experience by uplifting their voices within the community through unique opportunities, programs, and events.

MARKETING OBJECTIVE

To grow the Healing Justice Santa Barbara team by accumulating 25 applications for the volunteer/internship program within 3 months through promotional tabling and social media outreach.

MARKET RESEARCH

CLIENT BACKGROUND

Healing Justice Santa Barbara (HJSB) traces its roots back to May 2020 when it emerged as a response to the destabilizing effects of racism and anti-Blackness that were occurring nationwide. Driven by the desire to build resilient communities for African diaspora and create a more equitable city, the organization embarked on a journey to address systemic inequalities first and foremost in the Santa Barbara community. (1) The founders of the organization recognized the grief and pain experienced by the Black community due to the great amount of Black deaths, and believed that Black people can heal through a necessary systemic transformation. Their approach is guided by a profound love for Black/African Americans. (2) In their own words HJSB stated, "We have no excuses not to act; and so we must reform and divert resources from the Sheriff's Office and Police Department, protect and preserve Black landmarks, provide institutional support for celebration of Juneteenth/Black Independence day, and push our cities to issue proclamations condemning police brutality and declaring racism a public health emergency. (3) "

Initially, HJSB created virtual spaces where Black individuals could come together, share how they were feeling, and collectively mourn the Black lives lost due to racism and police brutality. This initiative served as a catalyst for their growth, starting with their May 31st, 2020 demonstration, which sparked the birth of Healing Justice Santa Barbara as a formal organization. The term "Healing Justice" itself was coined by a Black and Indigenous organizer, encapsulating the essence of HJSB's mission. (2)

HJSB is composed of four key players who have instrumental roles in the organization's development and operations. Simone Akila Ruskamp, the co-founder and executive director of community coordination and ethics care, has been a driving force in advocating for the formation of a police oversight commission in Santa Barbara. (4) Krystle Farmer Seighart, another co-founder, serves as the executive director of programs and operations. She has a decade of experience as a community organizer, facilitator, and mentor, skills that have been significant in implementing impactful programs that align with HJSB's mission. (5) Leticia Forney Resch holds the position of director of cultural arts and events. (6) She has introduced initiatives such as "Chocolate Baby Story Time." (7) The last key player is the community. The support and engagement of community members through donations, volunteering, and attending events have been invaluable to the organization's endeavors. HJSB operates with a limited staff size that often does not get compensated for their labor. The organization recognizes the importance of paying Black women for their time and expertise, emphasizing the need for equitable compensation and valuing the contributions of marginalized communities. (8)

Easily found on the HJSB website is their mission statement: Healing Justice Santa Barbara aspires to uplift all Black/African-Americans to affirm that they are deserving of safety, love, equity, respect, and joy. (9)

In order to fulfill their mission, HJSB offers a range of products and services to support their goals. (10) Merchandise serves as one of the organization's strategies to raise funds for their programs and operational activities. Collaborating with local Black artists, HJSB creates products such as T-shirts, tank tops, hoodies, long sleeves, and hats. These items not only generate alternative income but also promote and uplift the arts within the Black community in Santa Barbara. HJSB actively strives to create a space where all Black voices are heard, seen, and respected. They accomplish this through various means, including advocating for policy reforms, facilitating healing for Black folx, offering education initiatives and leadership programs, providing emergency funds and referrals, and organizing events that honor the Black community and its history. Several programs offered through their website include the following: "Voices of Liberation," a collection of conversations with Black community members, BIPOC grassroots community organizers, and activists. (11) Their "Historical Archive", a 3D online repository that sheds light on the full truth of the Black experience, while challenging erasure and white supremacy. (12) And finally, "Chocolate Baby Story Time" which is designed to uplift young Black children. This initiative presents a series of audiobooks that center on Black culture, joy, histories, and futures. (13) While providing these several initiatives, HJSB positions itself as a unique organization in the realm of Black empowerment and promotion of Black joy in Santa Barbara.

Currently, Healing Justice Santa Barbara utilizes mainly online mediums for the majority of their public relations, advertising, and promotional efforts. HJSB can be found on Facebook, Instagram, and YouTube. (14) During the client briefing meeting with the HJSB team, they highlighted that the most successful engagement is via their Instagram page and the most donations are via their website. (15) While they have a YouTube channel, they have struggled to gain traction on that platform. At this point in time, the Healing Justice SB Youtube channel has 78 subscribers and 22 videos with an average of 96.95 views per video. (16) Likewise, the last post on Youtube was 7 months ago. Even though Youtube is a great way to offer content in the form of videos, HJSB utilizes Instagram much more frequently and consistently in order to promote the organizational efforts within the Santa Barbara community. This is reflected in their accountant statistics and engagement. The HJSB Instagram account has 302 posts and 2,897 followers. (17) According to the HJSB team, they have a strict color and design policy for their organization. (18) When browsing the website and Instagram page, it becomes evident that they mostly utilize earthy tones (i.e., tan, clay). Likewise, they also stay consistent with the organization's branding by only making use of a couple of different fonts, which can be seen on their social media, their website, and their templates for every post. The uniformity and consistency of their design help to establish their brand identity and appeal to their buyer personas. The buyer personas of the HJSB organization include but are not limited to, Black youth and parents, the white adults/community, Santa Barbara locals, and philanthropists. These personas make up their primary and secondary audiences

Healing Justice Santa Barbara primarily serves the Black community of Santa Barbara including Black LGBTQ+ people, Black people with disabilities, undocumented Black people, underserved Black people, and Black people that speak in African American Vernacular English. (19) The organization also acknowledges the interweaving of the Black and Indigenous experience on the traditional Chumash land and seeks to collaborate in supporting Indigenous folx in Santa Barbara. However, their primary focus is on reaching Black folx of all ages, sex, income, marital status, occupation, education, and any number of children. Possible psychographic characteristics for HJSB's audience include low socio-economic status; parents raising children on their own; individuals who demonstrate determination in the face of adversity; individuals looking for support and resources; individuals who have aspirations for the betterment of themselves and their family; and individuals who have a strong tie to their cultural heritage.

Healing Justice Santa Barbara will continue to serve all Black folx in the Santa Barbara community but to successfully implement our solution, HJSB's ideal primary audience should be narrowed down to a more specific target— Black youth in education. (20) Black youth of all ages, sex, and education levels will be prioritized, with special attention to Black youth in high school. Possible psychographics for this new target audience include: individuals who are passionate about enacting change within their community; individuals wishing to be leaders in their community; individuals who wish to attend higher education; individuals part of a single-parent household; individuals who desire better opportunities; individuals lacking appropriate resources to succeed; and individuals passionate about social justice, equity, and social change.

The organization's second target audience is Santa Barbara locals and philanthropists. According to Krystle Farmer Seighart, co-founder of Healing Justice, the white population in Santa Barbara is the demographic that has shown to be donating the most amounts to the organization. (21) This secondary audience's psychographic characteristics are of individuals who are passionate about playing a role in offering opportunities to expand on Black greatness and history in Santa Barbara. It most likely consists of individuals that: believe in creating a larger space for the Black community; are committed to preserving Black historical archives; and want to support aspiring Black youth to excel in education.

While the secondary target audience is currently the wealthier, white population in Santa Barbara, the ideal secondary target audience for HJSB that would best align with their current main goal of uplifting Black youth is caregivers and parents of Black children (22) since they are the ones who have direct access to the Black youth in the community. Psychographic characteristics that could apply to the ideal secondary audience include parents that fall in a range of socioeconomic statuses, but primarily those who are of lower socioeconomic status; parents that are raising their children on their own; parents who want to open pathways for their children to excel in the education systems; those who wish to see their children in higher education; parents who are passionate about helping expand the education of Black history in the education systems.

Within the Santa Barbara community, HJSB does not have any organization they consider a direct “competitor” as the work they do is unique and specific to the Black community. (23) However, the competition derives from other nonprofit organizations that are also trying to target community members for donations. Several environmental nonprofits exist in Santa Barbara including, but not limited to, Unite To Lite which aims to provide low-cost solar lighting, Channel Island Restoration which works to restore habitat at the Channel Islands National Park, and Explore Ecology whose goal is to educate youth about the environment. (24) These organizations are able to target environmentally conscious community members and often garner support and attention due to their established presence in this community as well as their environmental impact goals. However, HJSB offers something new for Santa Barbara; a way to uplift the Black community not only in times of crisis but also in times of joy. (25) According to the organization founders, HJSB differs from other local nonprofits in three major ways: 1. they have extensively studied the history of the area, 2. they emphasize the importance of building relationships with donors, and 3. they have a wide scope of work compared to other organizations. ## STRENGTHS

Healing Justice Santa Barbara features superior management talent. Co-Founders Krystle Farmer Sieghart and Simone Akila Ruskamp as well as Creative Director Leticia Forney Resch, are defined by their passion and commitment to HJSB. Aside from this, as Black Women living in Santa Barbara, they have first-hand experience with the lack of community and feelings of isolation Black folx may often experience in this city. (27) Collectively they took action and have created a team that truly understands their target audience, allowing HJSB to reach them in unique ways and build a stronger community. Another strength of the organization worth highlighting is its distinct and unique position in the market. Contrasting with other NGOs, HJSB is the only organization that targets and provides services that seek to uplift and support all Black people in the community. (28) HJSB is able to provide an authentic customer experience and build a strong relationship with Black folx due to their unique approach to racial injustice, healing, and Black culture. Similarly, HJSB stands out from other local NGOs by creating a strong brand identity through the use of strict visual designs and binding to a few selected fonts and a curated color palette that represents the organization's vision and mission. (29) These aspects help build a strong and consistent visual identity for the organization.

WEAKNESSES

Healing Justice Santa Barbara faces the challenge of having a limited workforce, resulting in overworked employees who may struggle to meet the demands of their roles and responsibilities. (30) This can lead to potential burnout and hinder their ability to effectively manage and execute tasks, projects, and initiatives. Due to having a limited workforce, HJSB is unable to keep up with multiple platforms. (31) Their limited marketing resources pose a challenge in effectively managing and maintaining an active presence across multiple platforms. With restricted resources, it becomes difficult to allocate sufficient time, focus, and budget to each program, which may result in reduced engagement, reach, and impact. Limited financial resources are also a significant weakness of HJSB. Without sufficient funding, the organization may struggle to effectively address the diverse range of issues affecting the Black community. Limited resources can hinder the organization's ability to provide essential services, offer educational programs, conduct marketing research, or mobilize community outreach initiatives. Additionally, insufficient funding can limit the organization's capacity to hire more staff, invest in technological infrastructure, or engage in strategic partnerships, thereby restricting their ability to achieve long-term sustainable and impactful change.

OPPORTUNITIES

Healing Justice Santa Barbara revealed that most of their donation funds come from wealthier, white individuals, who tend to donate generously during any commemoration of Black experiences and cultural events and holidays. (32) It would be favorable for HJSB to intentionally hold events during these days to be able to provide a gateway into future programs and greater funds. The official announcement of Juneteenth as a national holiday became a great opportunity to engage the community in support of the Black population in Santa Barbara. In the last 3 years, since 2020, there has been a noticeable increase in efforts to dismantle institutional racism. With the BLM movement growing, there has been a surge in organizations that advocate for Black lives. With the growth of the movement, stereotypical views about the Black community shifted, inspiring hope that people can live peacefully. (33) Despite advancements conquered by the Black movement, there have been setbacks. An example of this is the Supreme Court's decision to end affirmative action for college admissions. As an opportunity to grow their organization and assist Black youth affected by this legislation, HJSB could promote and reinforce Black youth leadership programs. (34) In order to harness a younger market, HJSB can also take advantage of the advancement of technology that makes it possible for social platforms to gain traction with Gen-Z and millennial generations. Being on various social platforms would allow room for growth through the spread of HJSB's mission and values, especially through short-form content creation. (35) Research has proven that attentional processes have a relationship with the amount of time that is spent online; the "digital distractions" (36) overpopulating the web create a window of opportunity to generate shorter content, that would consider shorter attention spans. (37)

THREATS

Changes in societal attitudes, public opinion, or political climate can pose a threat to Healing Justice Santa Barbara. These dynamic social shifts may result in evolving perspectives and priorities among the target audience, which could impact the organization's support base, engagement levels, and public perception. (38) Adapting to these changes is crucial to maintaining relevance and effectively addressing the needs of the community. Another challenge to the organization is HJSB restrictions in directing funds due to strict regulations imposed by grant providers. This lack of flexibility may limit their ability to allocate resources based on their specific needs, potentially constraining their strategic decision-making and hindering the organization's overall effectiveness. (39) Given there are limited funding and resources within the nonprofit sector, HJSB faces competition from other nonprofit organizations. This heightened competition for resources can pose challenges in securing adequate financial support, partnerships, and essential resources necessary for sustaining and expanding their operations. (40) The ongoing economic downturn presents HJSB with financial challenges, potentially resulting in reduced funding opportunities and constraints. The inability to allocate sufficient resources towards their programs and initiatives potentially hinders the organization's impact and growth. (41) The city of Santa Barbara has, historically, been plagued by racial hostility in the form of interpersonal racism. Within the past year, there have been growing numbers of racial incidents within the school district, including both verbal and physical acts of violence. (42)

PRIMARY TARGET AUDIENCE

Destiny is a driven, 18-year-old student living in Santa Barbara County. She recently graduated from Santa Barbara High School (43) and now attends the University of California, Santa Barbara. (44) As a 1st generation student, Destiny is aware that she will face additional barriers and disadvantages in comparison to more privileged peers. (45) Therefore, she is currently searching for a part-time job, volunteer opportunity, or internship to gain experience and strengthen her resume. (46) In high school, Destiny worked part-time at Blenders In The Grass, (47) a central coast favorite among students. Apart from being employed, she was also an active member of the Black Student Union, which emphasizes community through the uplifting of Black history and culture. (48) Participating in this club reaffirmed her belief in the power of young voices and their ability to make not only community-wide change, but change on a national level. (49) Since graduating from high school, Destiny has been searching for a similar community at UCSB. She is in the process of joining the Black Student Union on campus; (50) however, she wants to expand into work within the community – something she finds particularly important due to the rising rates of racism within the Santa Barbara School District. (51) When Destiny is not busy fighting for systemic change in the Santa Barbara community, she can likely be found at Sands Beach sipping on a Caje iced coffee (52) with her friends. Considered newly independent and finding herself continuing to advocate for change, Destiny is still an adolescent who spends an average of 5 hours per day scrolling through social media. (53) She has an account on nearly every platform, but she tends to scroll through Instagram, TikTok, and Youtube. (54) Like most adolescents, Destiny uses social media as a means to communicate with friends and folx that share her interests, as well as to stay up to date with the latest trends in fashion, music, and pop culture in general. (55) Destiny also finds it important to stay informed with current events; luckily, she can use social media to engage with local and national news (56) in the form of shorter content, a more desirable form to consume information among the youth. (57)

CREATIVE STATEMENT

Providing transformative internship opportunities that uplift Black folx and emphasize the importance of community growth and the empowerment of the next generation of leaders.

KEY CONSUMER BENEFIT

Prepare for nonprofit success and academic advancement by gaining hands-on experience, professional skills, and making a lasting social impact in the community with Healing Justice Santa Barbara.

PROMOTIONAL MIX

To successfully reach the ideal target audience (Black Youth – late high school and college students), HJSB should implement physical and digital mediums to advertise the organization and its programs. The physical medium would take the form of informative flyers that could be distributed in strategic areas, (i.e., such as universities and high school campuses) where these individuals are concentrated. Aside from physical flyers, HJSB should implement digital flyers, posts, and video content, to be shared on various social media platforms, including but not limited to TikTok, and Instagram, as well as professional networking sites such as LinkedIn.

VISUAL & VERBAL ELEMENTS

For the fonts, we recommend keeping the visuals clean and simple so the message is delivered smoothly. We also suggest using size 10 pt for body text, and 26.1 pt for headings for an organized design.

Healing Justice Santa Barbara's current color scheme reflects their position and mission very clearly. By using earthy tones throughout all visual materials, it will be possible to create a consistent and strong brand recognition that translates HJSB's identity beyond words.

PRIMARY TACTIC I

TABLING AND FLYERS

In order to actualize the creative strategy, we suggest that HJSB sets up informal promotional tables and booths in strategically chosen locations in the Santa Barbara area. By tabling at UCSB, SBCC, or the Santa Public Library, HJSB would be able to better reach its target audience. These tables would be run by at least 2 of the current student volunteers at HJSB. During these tabling sessions, the HJSB representatives would be able to provide informative and promotional material via flyers, engage in conversation with potential new volunteers/interns, and promote the organization's mission to heal and empower the black community to a wider audience. Currently, HJSB has limited face-to-face engagement with its target audience due to having a small team. As a solution, HJSB could partake in the Santa Barbara Public Library "Teen Job Fair" which would allow the organization to meet younger, high school-age, prospective volunteers. (58) Similarly, by campaigning and tabling on campus, more students will become aware of the nonprofit and the available internship opportunities at the organization. Additionally, it gives the non-profit the opportunity to meet other clubs and organizations on campus with a similar mission, such as the UCSB Black Student Union, (59) that could be willing to partner with HJSB in the future. By distributing flyers, prospective volunteers will be able to leave with a visual aid that highlights the benefits of participating in HJSB's internship program (the possibility of working with a passionate team; finding their own voice within the community; gaining professional skills and work experience to build a strong resume), as well as clear and easy directions of where to apply via a QR code.

BUDGET

Tabling can be executed on a minimal budget. A table retails at approximately $23.99 (60) and approximately 100 flyers, or promotional materials, will cost $10. (61) Therefore, the estimated budget for this tactic is roughly $35.

KPI

HJSB will be able to track the success of this tactic through several KPI metrics: the total number of people interacted with, the number of sign-ups for volunteer/internship opportunities/email outreach, and the number of applications submitted.

PRIMARY TACTIC II

SOCIAL MEDIA PROMO

In addition to setting up informal tables and booths in strategically chosen locations in Santa Barbara, we encourage creating shorter content, (62) specifically on TikTok and Instagram Reels. Prioritizing the creation of shorter content would allow Healing Justice to maximize the objective of having 25 people engage with the application process for internship positions in the span of 3 months. In terms of creating shorter content, we would strongly encourage keeping the time limit between 30 seconds and 1 minute to increase the overall amount of engagement it receives. (63) This would embrace a new approach from what Healing Justice has already been implementing with their online presence. HJSB currently uses its social media and youtube channel (64) to promote longer informational videos and infographics; (65) however, the current social media research has reported that shorter content tends to gain the most attraction from viewers. (66) Once the TikTok video/ Instagram reel is created, it would be shared with different organizations and clubs, most of which are actively associated with the University of California, Santa Barbara, and Santa Barbara City College. The organizations that would help to distribute this content on their Tiktok and Instagram accounts include the UCSB main page, UCSB Multicultural Center, UCSB Career Services, the Black Student Union, and the Black Studies Departments on both campuses, (67) in hopes that it would further entice prospective Black youths to apply with the promise of internship experience and building their resumes. Creating shorter video content would allow Healing Justice Santa Barbara to better target and reach the Black youth in the community, which can be carried out by using trendy and appropriate hashtags to enhance its search engine optimization (SEO). (68)

BUDGET

Creating TikTok and Instagram content can be accomplished with little to no cost. Both platforms are free applications across devices. (69) An internet connection would be needed to download and post content, but there are many public establishments that have access to an internet connection. (70)

KPI

We recommend tracking engagement with posts as our key performance indicator (KPI); TikTok Analytics can be used by HJSB to see how many views, likes, comments, shares, and submitted applications a post results in. (71) As well as Instagram Account Insight to track engagement and reach levels, in addition to new followers. (72)
